The new and widespread international crises (they are the "Third World War" for Pope Francis) highlight the urgency of new synergies between International Actors and staff who are ready to encourage "analysis and action" as the basis for dialogue between the parties in conflict. So the training of the new generations calls into question not only the competent institutions such as Foreign and Defense Ministries, International Organizations such as the United Nations and the European Union, but above all the University that through the Cooperation for Peace through young people can take on a new and fundamental role in foreign policy. Concrete experiences are those made by AESI (European Association of International Studies) which sees Ambassadors, University Professors, Generals working together who have played important roles in the UN Peacekeepers, European Union Representatives in crisis areas such as the Balkans (Sarajevo and Belgrade) or in the Middle East (Beirut, Damascus, Jerusalem), etc. The AESI Publication, that is presented at the Embassy of Italy to the Holy See, expresses how in a large symphony orchestra a real choral between Diplomacy Military Forces Peace University where young people take on a leading role, of Peace actors since the time of their studies in preparation for their diplomatic (some have already entered Diplomacy) and international (some are in the European Union and United Nations) careers! This is the big news of the "University Cooperation for Peace" - not the simple classic Academic Collaboration made of exchanges between teachers and students - where the university becomes an Actor of Peace through the involvement of young people and through them the United Nations / Forces of Peace etc. in the Cooperation programs.
